DARK WASTE ARMCHAIR HIGH GLOSS A pile of old boards formed the inspiration for this sofa and armchair. When we bought the house in France, that is, the ruins of a mill and annexes, all kinds of rotten doors and shutters were lying amidst the overgrown rubble. We removed the wood and stacked it on slats to dry it out. The boards were full of bugs, holes and mould. Our boys, who have seen it all, called me mad for wanting to use it to make furniture. The ultimate result is very unusual, especially due to the texture under the thick layer of clear varnish. The rotten wood now returns to the renovated mill, incorporated into two extremely exclusive pieces of furniture. I wanted to make the sofa low and luxurious, but as a result, the back cushions would not offer enough support. By making the seat cushions out of different types and shapes of foam, you sink into them and this provides sufficient support from the back cushions. We had smooth, shiny, gold-coloured velour made especially for these sofas. Due to our enthusiasm for the dark luxury pieces, we made a sofa and armchair out of very dark Dutch scrap wood not long afterwards and included them in the collection. A set of sofas and armchairs made out of scrap wood in shades of white with a silver-coloured fabric was commissioned for a hotel in Switzerland.
